The Mystery Space Beasts

by Wes Magee

They live on a planet
not far from the Sun.
Some fly through the air
while others just run.
Some have big heads
which are hairless as tin
while others have hair
which sprouts from their skin.
They dig food from dirt,
and gobble dead meat;
the young squeal like pigs
if you tickle their feet.
They slurp, burp, and grunt;
their manners are bad.
Their eyes become waterfalls

when they feel sad.
They come in most colours,
some yellow, some white.
Some dye their hair pink
and do look a sight.
These creatures vary
from tiny to tall,
And in salty water
they've been known to crawl.
Well, who are these space beasts?
Can't you guess who?
The answer is easy:
it's you, you, and YOU!

The Ant and the Grasshopper

by Aesop

In a bright summer field, a Grasshopper was hopping about, singing and playing without a care in the world. As he enjoyed the warm days, he saw a little Ant carrying grains of wheat and storing them carefully.

"Why do you work so hard?" asked the Grasshopper.

"Come and enjoy the sunshine with me!"

The Ant stopped for a moment and replied, "I am gathering food for the winter. You should do the same before the cold arrives."

The Grasshopper laughed. "Winter is far away! There is plenty of time to collect food. Right now, I just want to sing and dance!"

But the Ant ignored him and kept working.

Months passed, and soon winter came. The fields were covered in snow, and food became scarce. The Grasshopper, now cold and starving, wandered through the barren land.

He remembered the Ant and went to its nest to beg for food.

“Please, Ant, give me something to eat! I am starving!” the Grasshopper pleaded.

The Ant looked at him and asked, “What were you doing all summer?”

“I was singing and playing,” the Grasshopper admitted.
